Answer any TWO questions.

1. How important is the role of the father in the novel? Is David affected by the absence of his father in his life? If so, how? If not, how does he manage to overcome this?

2. Mr. Micawber's character has intrigued many literary analysts over the years, especially due to the fact that he was easily relatable to many during Dicken's time. Why is this so and what lesson can be learned from this character?

3. How does Dicken's challenge the accepted views of women during his time to promote the idea of the empowered female?
